

GAS WAS TURNED ON

JOHN GORE, A STOCKMAN, MEETS
DEATH BY ASPHYXIATION.Was Found Dead in Room of Lodging
House at 1301 Grand Avenue,
With Gas Flowing Freely—
Probably Accidental.

John Gore, a wealthy stockman who lived near Blue Springs, in the southeast part of Jackson county, was found dead in bed in a room on the third floor of J. P. Petty's lodging house, at 1301 Grand avenue, at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. His death was caused by asphyxiation, and is believed to have been the result of an accident. There was nothing to indicate that the gas, which had been flowing freely from an open jet for nearly nine hours, had been turned on with suicidal intent. It is the opinion of the coroner that Gore either turned on the gas by mistake or accidentally turned it on again after he had turned it off before retiring. Gore was in good circumstances financially, and his friends say there could have been no motive for his ending his life.

The dead man owned a large farm near Blue Springs, and was well known in that part of the county. He came to Kansas City Monday to meet his son, William J. Gore, who had arrived from Oklahoma to make settlement with him in a real estate belonging to the son. Monday night about midnight he went to Petty's boarding house and engaged a room for the night. Yesterday morning as the landlord passed through the hallway he detected the odor of gas, and found that the poisonous vapor was coming from the room occupied by Gore. The door of the room was forced open, and Gore's body was found stretched out on the bed. The coroner was notified, and had the body removed to Carroll's undertaking establishment. An inquest will not be held. The remains will be taken to Blue Springs to-day for burial.

The death of John Gore recalls the killing of his wife, Mollie Gore, by Annie O'Hearn in this city on the night of March 2, 1888. Mrs. O'Hearn was proprietor of a saloon on West 12th street, one of the toughest resorts in town, which was visited by the police commissioners about two months ago. Mrs. O'Hearn suspected that her husband was intimate with Mrs. Gore, and the two women quarreled a number of times about O'Hearn's visits to Mrs. Gore. On the night of March 2, 1888, Mrs. O'Hearn bought a revolver at a Grand avenue pawnshop, and went to the home of Mrs. Gore, who was alone. She summoned her to the front door of her home and the two women engaged in a fierce quarrel. During the war of words Mrs. Gore slammed the door in Mrs. O'Hearn's face, and the latter then fired at her through the stained glass opening. The bullet pierced her heart and she died instantly. Mrs. O'Hearn was tried for murder and acquitted. She was the same woman committed suicide in the same way before it was purchased by Mrs. O'Hearn to commit suicide. Mrs. O'Hearn is now living with relative, Mrs. O'Hearn, a daughter of Patrick Sherlock, at one time a wealthy and well known stock trader in this city.

After the murder of his wife by Mrs. O'Hearn, John Gore married a second time. His widow and three children born of his first union are still living. The dead man was wealthy and his wife was a friend and neighbor of Matt Lee, who committed suicide in Deming's saloon at Third and Grand avenues last week. Gore left no note, and the coroner found nothing in his room. The police found that he had committed suicide in the same way as in an accident. The police found the road man, committed suicide in the same way as in an accident. The police found the road man, committed suicide in the same way as in an accident.
